5 Conversations to Have with Your Tween This Week

A practical guide to bypassing the "fine" and connecting with your daughter's heart.

Hey Mom, We Get It.

Parenting in an ever-changing world is tough. Right now, you might be looking at your tween daughter and wondering where your little girl went. The eye rolls have started, the friend drama is exhausting, and getting her to say more than "fine" when you ask about her day feels like pulling teeth.

Take a deep breath. You are doing a great job, and God specifically chose you to be her mother.

At True Girl, we believe that bringing moms and daughters closer isn't about grand, expensive gestures. It's about small, intentional moments of connection. We've put together five short conversation starters you can use this week—in the car, at dinner, or right before bed.

> No forced awkwardness!
>
> Just genuine connection points to help give her the courage to be the girl God created her to be. Let’s get started.

Conversation 1: The Rose & The Thorn

The Setup: The best place for this is the car ride home from school or practice. When she's looking out the window, less intense eye contact makes opening up feel safer.

What to Say:
"I'll go first today: My 'Rose' (the best part of my day) was getting coffee with my friend. My 'Thorn' (the hardest part) was dealing with a frustrating email at work. What was your Rose and Thorn today?"

The True Girl Insight

Going first models vulnerability. When she sees you admitting to a "Thorn," it gives her permission to admit that things at school weren't perfect either, without feeling like she's complaining or failing.

Conversation 2: The "God-Given" Talent

The Setup: While you're doing something active together—baking cookies, walking the dog, or folding laundry.

What to Say:
"You know, I was watching you [insert activity] earlier. It made me realize how uniquely God made you. What is one thing you feel like you're really naturally good at?"

The True Girl Insight

Tweens are terrified of standing out, but they secretly want to be seen. By rooting her talent in how God made her, you take the pressure off "performance" and focus on her God-given identity.

Conversation 3: The Friendship Check-in

What to Say:
"If you could only invite two friends on a road trip tomorrow, who would they be and why?"

The Goal: Sneakily discover who she currently values most and gauge the health of her closest relationships without cross-examining her.

Conversation 4: The Worry Dump

What to Say:
"If you had a magic wand and could fix exactly one thing causing you stress right now, what would it be?"

The Goal: Creating a safe space for her anxieties. When she answers, don't fix it immediately. Say, "That sounds really hard. Thank you for telling me."

Conversation 5: The Reminder

What to Say:
"Can I tell you what I love most about who you're becoming?" (Share a specific character trait, like her kindness or bravery, not her appearance).

The Goal: To end the week by actively pouring biblical courage into her heart.

Keep Connecting at Home

If you loved seeing your daughter open up this week, you don't have to stop here. The True Girl Subscription Box is designed to deliver mom+daughter discipleship right to your door every single month.

Subscribe & Start Your Next Date Today